FRIDAY.....DECEMBER 22

It is said that it is more blessed to give than to receive. That we will not deny, but we do affirm that its a heap sight costlier, tho.

The exiled sultan of the turks who fled from his harem and one-hundred, twenty and more wives, exhibited a rare piece of judgment when he did it before Xmas.

That Providence, R. I., pastor, Adolph Englehardt, whom his wife charges with having had 122 amours, and who was interned by the Government during the war as a dangerous enemy alien, did not have it done to him soon or long enough either, if his wife be correct.

We have no enemies, at least we make no acknowledgement of that fact, here and now, and to all of our friends we extend our wishes for the season's best in happiness of the solid and lasting variety, which necessarily includes health and a fair measure of prosperity. The Republican, after this issue, will not be seen again until 1923, but on the first Friday of the new year it will again appear at your door. While thanking each and every individual for whatever they have contributed to the paper's welfare and success, if any has been attained, we ask and dare to hope for your indulgence through the year just ahead—Again, good cheer to everybody.

In this issue, we reproduce a short article carried by the press this week relating to American exports during the present year and particularly for the month of November. And do not forget that it is and was under the Fordney-McCumber tariff law, enacted by the present Republican Administration. The report shows a total export business of $383,000,- 000. The November increase over October was $12,000,000, $90,000,- 000 greater than exports of the same month last year and $138,000,000 in excess of exports for Nov. 1913, the first year of President Wilson's term.
The free trade and tariff opponents have been yelling themselves hoarse that the recent tariff act had ruined the Country's export business and was responsible for almost all of our financial ills. Prophesied and declared ruination by the Democratic press on account of the Republican tariff seems to have turned the other way round.

The Simmons Road law, as enacted by the last Kentucky Legislature, was on Friday of last week declared to be unconstitutional by the Appellate Court. This act was another of two of the late legislature's partisan attempts to be held for naught by Kentucky's highest Court. Before it was the obnoxious registration law.
The chief reason for the Court's decision in the road law was due to the fact that the General Assembly created new offices and then attempted to name the incumbents, which the Court says it had no right to do.
The sub-structure of the greatest political machine known in recent State history was laid by the Democratic majority in the act voided by the Court. Day by day, more and more, we may see the absolute necessity of sane, sensible and seasoned courts composed of a comparative few to hold the rest of us in check when we start running to seed in given directions.

STRAY STREAKS

(By Fluke McFluke.)

Notice from the press that they are killing wolves within the city of Chicago. We knew the windy city was a wild and wooly place, in fact, we thought too much so to harbor wolves.

We would rather be a live teetotaler or a private citizen than a dead moonshiner or prohibition enforcement officer.

This last cold spell caused us to divorce our old fall suit, though we'll probably be reunited when the flowers bloom again.

We are looking forward to I. D.
Claire's week-end visit with expectations that something may happen soon after his arrival. We had a dream Friday night, while lying on our right side, the best night in the week to dream dreams that come true, and in the vision we beheld vintage of a rich, amber-hued color and were convinced by tasting thereof, that Volstead, in all his life, never had his hands on or about the subject of our dream, the forerunner of what is to be a realization in the near future.

Aside from the above, or below, depending upon where Duke drops it in, we are not expecting much for Xmas.

One member of the office force is a sort of, we nearly said silent partner, but that would be a mistake, that is the silent partner part, in a new restaurant in town, and if we can get she and the others concerned, to open up a set of books we are gonna do some patronizing of the new concern.

We traded with Bill Himes, the newest meat market man until he wanted us to pay him up. It made us mad, seemed that he might be sorter feared to trust us, so we hain't been back there since. Bill know-ed we couldn't pay till we drew on our backer and thats pooled and not delivered yet.

Albert Cox, I. D. Claire's bard of teakettle hollow is a real economist, in more ways than one. Frinstance: by wearing his hair and whiskers long, we mean in length too, tennorial artists' fees are saved. He says he does not have to wash his face, his neck and ears look no different from the bath either, so what's the use. If he wore a collar and tie both would be hidden by the alfalfa, so those are dispensed with. The small portion of his shirt front not hidden by his jacket is completely covered by the fallen and tangled facial grass, so the frequent change of that part of his raiment is wholly unnecessary. Economical? Yes, he says that's his middlest name.

Notice in a Louisville Daily, where an incident transpired in that city, one of the parties therein mentioned was spoken of as having been born in "Hartford, Ohio county, on the outskirts of Owensboro, Ky." More than 27 miles of field, thicket and woodland lie 'twixt the two points.
Time was when Hartford was a county seat town and Owensboro "the Yellow Banks" and all of that region a part of Ohio County.

Kaiser Rial says of all the things of greatest flight money beats everything he knows of or has heard about, that it is a sort of one-wayer, you have to go after it but its faster than greased lightning when going.
